The Impact of International Remittances on Poverty: Evidence from the Southern and Eastern Mediterranean

Author: Boutaina Ismaili Idrissi - Professor of Economics at Faculty of Law and Economics of Agdal -University Mohammed V Rabat, member of Association Marocaine d'Etudes et de Recherches sur les Migrations (AMERM) and EuroMedMig Steering Committee member.

Abstract: Workers Remittances represent an important source of financing for recipient countries to the extent that it exceeds sometimes foreign direct investment (FDI) flows. International remittances flowing into developing economies has gained an increasing importance with view to the volume of these flows, their importance for the financial sector as well as their overall impact at the economic and social level. Based upon a review of theoretical and empirical literature, this paper uses an econometric model to assess the impact of remittances in terms of reducing the level of poverty. It is based on panel data of 8 southern and eastern Mediterranean countries (Algeria, Egypt, Jordan, Lebanon, Morocco, Tunisia, Turkey and West bank and Gaza) over the period 2000-2018. In most of these countries, remittances represent the largest foreign exchange earnings and represent an average of 8% of GDP. The results suggest that remittances have a positive impact on growth and therefore contribute, through income generation to poverty reduction. This impact becomes significant as the level of remittances relative to GDP increases.
