IMPOSSIBLE! QUÈ HA PASSAT?

That Didn't Take Long: Novelists Tackle Trump

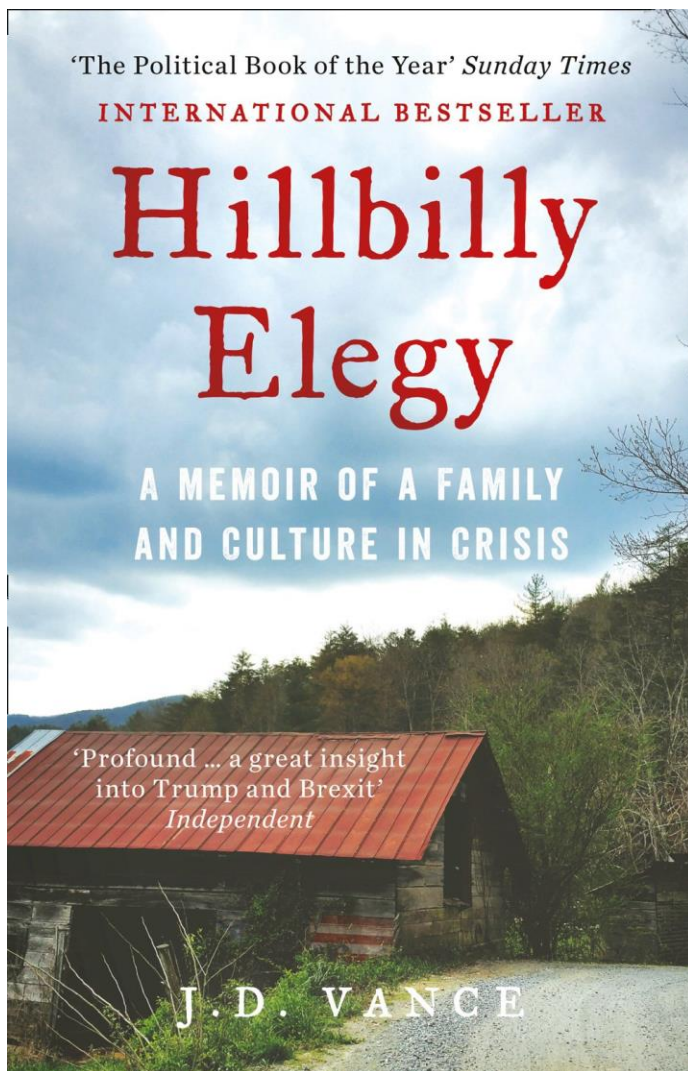

THE HORROR, THE HORROR

Salman Rushdie, Gary Shteyngart, and Jonathan Lethem have all published fiction that deals with the Age of Trump, but where are the pens warmed up in hell?

Aleksandar Hemon

“Trump is an absolute and total failure in American society, including its literature and culture and art, and politics, and democracy, and everything!”

—“Nationalism and Contemporary American Literature,” 2017

“...to transform shock into a high alertness that prevents anything from being taken for granted.”

—“Stop Making Sense, or How to Write in the Age of Trump,” 2017

Aleksandar Hemon

[A literature that] “craves the conflict and owns the destruction, a split-mind literature that features fear and handles shock, that keeps self-evident ‘reality’ safely within the quotation marks. Never should we assume the sun will rise tomorrow, that America cannot be a fascist state, or that the nice-guy neighbor will not be a murderer because he gives out candy at Halloween. America, including its literature, is now in ruins, and the next four years will be far worse than anyone can imagine. Which is why we must keep imagining them as we struggle to survive them. To write in and of America, we must be ready to lose everything, to recognize we never had any of it in the first place, to abandon hope and embrace struggle, to fight in the streets and in our sentences. It will not be even close to comfortable.”

—“Stop Making Sense, or How to Write in the Age of Trump,” 2017

“Against Literary Nationalism”

Jacobin, March 2017

Jan Clausen

When literature serves as “ontological propaganda” for a teleological construction of “a pre-Trump America” >>>> the Obama
years as a “Camelot of elegance, grace, literary sophistication...
decency.”

Engagement in “the language of American exceptionalism” >>>> “this isn’t who we are,” elision of the most problematic aspects of US history.

Viet Thanh Nguyen

“The Post-Trump Future of Literature”

The New York Times, Dec. 2020

“Mr. Trump destroyed the ability of white writers to dwell in the apolitical.”

“Explicit politics in American poetry and fiction has mostly been left to the marginalized: writers of color, queer and trans writers, feminist writers, anticolonial writers.”

The Trump Story Project, Slate

10 short stories, published weekly between 24 January and 6 March 2017.

Héctor Tobar, “The Daylight Underground” (What does it look like when 1 million people are deported all at once?)

Ben H. Winters, “Fifth Avenue” (Trump keeps his campaign promises.)

Edan Lepucki, “Chorus” (In the Pence administration, high school girls have to take things into their own hands.)

Saladin Ahmed “Clay and Smokeless Fire” (He had seen fool kings and robber-kings, mad kings and rape-kings. The new American king was all of them at once.)

Jeff VanderMeer, “Trump Land” (It started as a joke, and then it turned into a theme park, and then it became something worse.)

The Trump Story Project, Slate

10 short stories, published weekly between 24 January and 6 March 2017.

Lauren Beukes, “Patriot Points” (You may qualify for huge discounts, TSA Precheck approval, and more!)

Elizabeth Bear, “What Someone Else Does Not Want Printed” (Comforting the comfortable and afflicting the afflicted.)

Nisi Shawl, “Slippernet” (Is it ethical to force empathy on your enemy?)

Everyone knows that Harvard has "lost its way." They hired, from New York (Bill D) and Chicago (Lori L), at ridiculously high salaries/fees, two of the WORST and MOST INCOMPETENT mayors in the history of our Country, to "teach" municipal management and government. These two Radical Left fools left behind two cities that will take years to recover from their incompetence and evil. Harvard has been hiring almost all woke, Radical Left, idiots and "birdbrains" who are only capable of teaching FAILURE to students and so-called "future leaders." Look just to the recent past at their
