

Dimitris Plantzos is Professor of classical archaeology at the National and Kapodistrian University of Athens. He studied history and archaeology at Athens, and holds an MPhil and a DPhil in classical archaeology from Oxford, where he also spent three years as a British Academy Postdoctoral Fellow. He is the author of various papers and books on Greek art and archaeology, archaeological theory and classical reception. His Greek-language textbook on Greek Art and Archaeology, first published in 2011 by Kapon Editions, was published in 2016 in English and is now available by American publishers Lockwood Press in Atlanta, Georgia. His more recent book, The Art of Painting in Ancient Greece, published by Kapon Editions in Athens, was also published by Lockwood Press in 2018. He is currently finishing a monograph titled L'Archéopolitique: antiquité, territoire, population, scheduled to appear in 2024, in French, by Sorbonne University Press. Since 2022, he is Director of the Research Centre for the Digital Humanities based at the University of Athens.
